

The Operations Board

project-ops · built in notion

Most board problems are architecture problems: a database nobody trusts, handoffs held in someone's head, and no way to see which job is stuck.

What it connects to: The board sits downstream of the CRM and upstream of the invoice. Work arriving without its deal context is what makes a board go stale.

1 of 3 SYSTEM

The jobs database itself, one row per job, with the fields every downstream view reads.

2 of 3 THINKING

The same records as a board by stage, so a job that has stopped moving is visible without anyone running a report.

The screenshot displays a Kanban board for 'Halden Restoration — Jobs'. The board is organized into columns representing different stages of the restoration process. Each column has a header with the stage name and a count of jobs. The jobs are represented as cards, each containing details about the project, the assigned person, and the current status.

Board Structure:
