

The Intake System

data-collection · built in hubspot

A half-record in the CRM is worse than no record, because it looks complete.

What it connects to: The form and the system of record are almost never the same tool. Everything expensive happens in the gap: duplicates, half-records, and fields that mean different things on each side.

1 of 4 SYSTEM

Here's the intake spine: validate, refuse what's malformed, dedupe, then write a clean record.

2 of 4 THINKING

The validation gate is the part that matters — it refuses rather than guessing.

The screenshot displays a workflow editor interface with a central node titled "Is this a person we already have?". The node is configured with the following settings:

- Parameters: The "Conditions" section contains a single condition: `{{ $json.existing === true && $json.confidence > 0.8 }}`. A checkbox labeled "is true" is checked.
- Settings: The "Convert types where required" toggle is turned on.
- Options: The "Options" section is currently empty.

The interface is divided into three main panels:

- INPUT: Displays "No input data" and includes a button "Execute previous nodes" with the text "to view input data" below it.
- OUTPUT: Displays "No output data" and includes a button "Execute step" with the text "to view output data" below it.

At the bottom of the editor, there is a "Logs" tab and a suggestion prompt: "I wish this node would...".

The intake form itself, with real field types bound to CRM properties.
